Manager Comment

Despite the overhanging uncertainty around the impending change in president in the US, global markets started the year strongly with the Dow Jones breaking through 20 000 points for the first time in its history, as investor sentiment was buoyed by improving economic data out of the US and Europe.

Global emerging markets (+5.45% in US dollar) outperformed developed markets (+2.35% in US dollar) over the month while global bonds and global property rose 1.13% and 0.58% respectively in USD. Locally, the All Share rose a handsome 4.31%, driven mostly by industrials and resources stocks. Large cap stocks (4.67%) outperformed mid (1.66%) and small-caps (2.42%), while resources (10.47%) outperformed financials (-0.99%) and industrials (4.39%). Bank stocks were 4.48% weaker following a strong end to 2016 while platinum miners were among the strongest gainers during the month. Nominal bonds (1.33%), inflation-linked bonds (1.41%) and property (1.63%) also provided positive returns. The rand was mixed against major currencies, ending stronger against the US dollar and weaker against the euro, British pound and Japanese yen.

Most funds therefore provided positive returns over the month, especially those with greater exposures to equity. In the multi-asset space therefore, flexible income funds typically lagged the more aggressive flexible equity portfolios.

Global politics are likely to continue to impact market sentiment for the coming year as populist politics gains momentum. The impact of Donald Trump's economic policy on global trade and foreign relations, Brexit and elections across Europe are just some of the potential concerns. Locally, sovereign credit ratings will remain a focus with a downgrade still a possibility. With the growing uncertainty we prefer a balanced exposure of strategies in portfolios.
