Manager Comment

Fears of a global economic slowdown took centre stage as poor data from the likes of the US, coupled with the potential of Britain exiting the Euro area, caused significant market volatility, particularly in early February as global markets had their worst start to the year since 2008. However during the second half of February markets rallied as expectations for another interest rate increase by the US Federal Reserve was pushed out to later in the year and an increase in the oil price caused a Resource rally. As a result, equity markets were only slightly negative for the month with the MSCI World Index returning -0.7% (USD). Emerging markets fared slightly better with the MSCI Emerging Markets Index returning -0.2% (USD). Global bond yields fell as investors fled to safe haven assets with the Barclays Capital Global Aggregate Index returning 3.2% (USD).

Locally the South African equity market bucked the trend of global markets to finish the month positively with the All Share Index (ALSI) returning 0.6% (ZAR). This was mainly as a result of the rally in Resource stocks, to which the South African market has a higher than average exposure. The Resource Index returned 6.0% (ZAR) for the month while both Industrials and Financials performed negatively. However both the State of the Nation Address and Budget Speech were received cautiously and perhaps lacked the defining decisive decisions required to stave off a ratings downgrade. Rating agencies will closely monitor the execution of what was promised. The South African fixed interest market responded negatively with the All Bond Index returning -0.8% (ZAR) while inflation-linked bonds returned 0.3% (ZAR) as inflation numbers printed higher than expected at 6.2% to fall outside the 3% to 6% target range of the Reserve Bank. Listed property defied rising bond yields to be the best performing domestic asset class for the month as it returned 3.6% (ZAR). The rand gained some ground against the US dollar ending the month 0.7% stronger.

The biggest contributors to the positive performance in February were the offshore equity, local property and local equity exposures with an overweight to resources. The largest detractors from performance were funds that were underweight Resource stocks.

We continue to remain prudently positioned as there are many risks to the global economy at this stage, which makes it difficult to get very bullish on risk assets to any meaningful degree. Risk management is going to be vital as it appears volatility is here to stay for the next while.
